PROFESSIONAL SUMMARY

I build brand identity and the product it has to live inside, from the same hand. At Uncover I designed the logo and brand foundation, then carried that system into the website, mobile app, and reusable UI myself - no handoff gap between "the brand" and "the interface." That's the same problem NoloX solves for founders: a mark and a system that stay intentional once they hit a real product, not just a deck. Six years across product and UI/UX design, with brand and identity work running through nearly all of it.

CORE SKILLS

Brand & Identity: Logo design, brand foundations, visual identity systems, brand guidelines, holding a look together as a product or client list grows

UI/UX & Product: Wireframing, responsive web and mobile design, design systems, Figma components, prototyping, developer handoff

Web & Launch: Landing pages, conversion-focused websites, Wix and Framer builds, launch-ready assets

Delivery: Founder-facing collaboration, fast iteration, multi-brand throughput under live deadlines

WHAT I'D BRING TO NOLOX

- Identity that survives contact with a real product. Most brand work stops at the deck. I've taken a mark through to a live app and website myself - Uncover's logo and system now run across web, mobile, and a full UI library I built.
- One person for brand and the interface it sits in. At Crevia I run identity and digital assets across four client brands at once - Mymy, Al Yamin, Klay Consultants, and ATK - so the visual system and the product surface never drift apart.
- Founder-collaborative by habit, not by training. I-DOD and FuelBuddy were both build-with-founders situations: ambiguous requirements turned into flows, systems, and shipped screens through direct back-and-forth, not a brief handed down.
- Comfortable owning conversion, not just aesthetics. Landing page and onboarding work at FuelBuddy and Maximor AI moved real numbers (62% to 78% completion; transaction errors down 38%) - identity that's also required to perform.
